Burden of snow too much for shed

Resident warns others they may not be covered by insurance

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

It was the haphazard birdhouse that first alerted Don Herman that there was something wrong with the shed that sits on the other side of his driveway from his home.

A glance out his window showed the birdhouse missing and the 80 ft x 34 ft shed was at a strange angle. What he found when he went out to investigate the cause is damage he estimates will cost him more than $100,000.

Sometime during the morning of Dec. 31 the weight of snow that's accumulated so far this season proved to be too much for the structure and collapsed the roof in.

Courtney Whalen Western Review

The accumulation of snow this winter proved to be too much for a shed that has stood Don Herman's property for more than 30 years when the roof caved in on Dec. 31 trapping a number of items, including his pickup truck. Herman found out his insurance policy won't cover any of the cost.

would be no claim paid out, as the collapse was the result of something preventable.

It had already been a long few days as Herman said the uncertainty and worry had taken their toll on the amount of sleep they were getting.

"I just a constant worry over whether you're covered and then when you find out you're not, it's even worse," he said.

After the amount of snow the area has already received this year he had noticed the snow on the roof of his home was getting "deep" so he had some one come clean it off. He then had several other outbuildings on the property cleared of snow. A crew was supposed to be coming on Jan. 2 to take care of the shed — unfortunately that was too late.

It's not a situation he would wish on anyone else. "Get the snow off them now before it does happen," he said.

He urges other residents not only to be proactive in getting their buildings cleared of snow build up, but also take a close look at their insurance policy to see just what coverage they are paying for.

"We've been paying on something we can't collect on," he said.

Now all the costs associated with the collapse, for the building itself, the contents, the clean up and getting a sea can to store what was salvaged, will be coming out of his own coffers.

"You can't just leave it all either," he said of saving what he could from the shed and cleaning up the rest.

In the 35 years the Hermans have had the shed they have never had to clear it off before, he noted. A few warm days in between cold patches would loosen the snow and allow it to slide off the sloped roof.

After what happened to them last week, he doesn't want other property owners to wait for those warmer days.

The one positive in the situation is that no one was in the shed at the time the roof collapsed, he noted.

"Nobody was hurt, other than the pocket book."

A message to the Insurance Bureau of Canada was not returned by press time last week.

Museum could be taken on by town, county

Historical society has approached municipalities with proposal

Paul Brian
Western Review

The Drayton Valley and District Historical Society (DVHS) is turning the page.

DVHS, which has managed the museum and historical buildings, located adjacent to the Omplex, for years hopes to turn operations over to the town of Drayton Valley and Brazeau County as an aging membership is growing weary in keeping up and managing what they regard as a vital focal point of the community.

"I've probably the last five years at least we haven't had more than five members. The youngest one of the 10 was probably early 70s. All of us have been working down there for five, 10, 15 years and we get older every year, and tired," explained

Charlie Miner, secretary-treasurer for DVHS. "A lot of people are interested in the museum, they like to go and see, but they don't become a part of it. So we just felt it was time to explore a change because otherwise if we didn't in another two or three years all of us would be at the end of our rope and it would be just sitting here."

Miner praised the town and county for being strongly supportive of the historical society for years including cutting to lawn and letting them use the land down by the Omplex. DVHS is looking forward to working out an arrangement with the municipalities that would see them take greater stewardship over the museum and historical buildings.

Ideally, DVHS would remain on in a more limited capacity as an advisory board.

"What I foresee, and the others seem to agree, is that we will maintain the society and its registration for charitable donation and everything," Miner said, while noting its work will become less involved. "We're calling it an advisory board to the town and county, and we will continue to look at expanding the existing complex in terms of if more historical buildings become available."

The advisory board would make recommendations on buildings offered to the town and county for the museum. While Miner anticipates a portion of the costs of moving, setting up and so forth could still be covered partly by grants the main source of funds would be the town and county.

"Our situation now is that when we get something if it's a $20,000 project we have to scrounge around and come up with at least $10,000," Miner said, noting that much of DVHS' work has been partly funded through provincial grants such as the Community Incentives Program. Many grants worked out to roughly fifty-fifty, as Miner observed.

There was also some backup money the historical society has been working on that is drying up. "We also had some reserve funds

I guess you could call them that kind of accumulated over the years and we've been using that and we've had the odd donations and such like that," Miner said. "But we've slowly been using that up and it's just about to the end of the road now."

In addition to maintaining the DVHS property, the town has also provided written support to help DVHS obtain grants in the past and a small operating budget each year from Brazeau County has helped greatly. Miner also noted the strong support of Drayton Valley Devcon M.A. Diana McQueen in supporting the historical society and the local museum.

"Aside from that the past three years the town and county have provided us with $12,000 each per year for summer programs to hire employees for them and keep things open in summer," Miner said.

As for the future, Miner hopes the museum continues going strong. "I would like to see it continue," Miner said, noting the society would like to see the development of an on-field interpretive centre in the relatively near future. "We want to turn over the on-field as it was not here in the 50s, 60s and 70s. We want the old stuff and that. I think that's our prime question right now is we want to see that developed."

DVHS has already obtained an old wellhead and other outdated on-field equipment but is still looking for more relics of the old ranch.

Miner said that he hopes to have the jurisdiction of the museum turned over to the town and county by early this year.

"I'm pretty sure that it can be worked out so that they will take over their active part of it for the 2014 season."

Through the whole process of changing up the guard a bit in terms of managing the museum's funding Miner has been impressed with the local leadership.

"I'm really happy and appreciate of the enthusiasm and interest that both the county and town council have shown in our approach so far," Miner said. "They've really been very understanding and co-operative in that aspect."

"If I was in charge of Parkland County, I would ..."

New EPAC stage part of Phase 1

First stage of renovations continues with washrooms, lobby

Paul Brian
Western Review

Drayton Valley's old Caudium Theatre has come a long way.

The building is being expanded, upgraded and renovated as part of the "Eleanor Pickup Arts Centre" (EPAC). "Creating a Home for the Arts Project" and opened to wide acclaim Dec. 14 with a double bill show from Jessie Peters and Lizzy Hoyt.

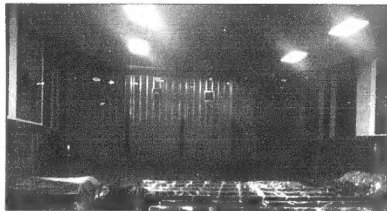

The show was the first glimpse the public was able to get of the newly finished and greatly expanded stage, which was one of the main objectives of Phase One. With the December concert over, work will recommence on other aspects of the renovations.

"Part of Phase One is the bedrooms and by-ones," said David Platt, chairperson of EPAC, noting he expects those parts of Phase One to be completed over summer, 2014.

Seeing Peters and Hoyt up on stage Dec. 14 was a good moment for Platt.

"It looks great, I thought it was awesome," he said. "And Jessie Peters, he made that piano sing."

The December concert played a number of roles, unveiling the stage and also as an 80th birthday celebration for Dr. David Belcher. Cake was served at intermission, and the ease with which volunteers were able to move around the theatre impressed Platt in terms of the layout.

"When they ended the first part and walked out with the cake, that really looked spectacular," Platt said.

The renovation includes a 5,000-square-foot expansion to the facility and includes the new and expanded stage, dressing rooms, green room (for performers pre-show), new washrooms and an improved foyer. EPAC hopes to create a top-of-the-line performing arts centre while still retaining the historical character of the Caudium Theatre.

Hett estimates the total cost of the project will be around $2 million, and notes that the EPAC committee and community support has raised close to $1 million at this point.

EPAC's next show is Jan. 17 featuring Lewis and Royal and will be held at the Royal Canadian Legion while some further interior renovations are done at the performing arts venue.

From Feb. 16 until the end of May, 2014 the centre currently has a number of performers booked, including children's favourites like Fred Penner.

The stage is also rented out to various community groups such as dance schools and the Drayton Valley Music Festival.

EPAC has already begun booking the stage for 2015.

To make a donation, rent the theatre or purchase tickets for a show, visit www.performingartsvenue.ca or call (780) 496-7933.

Paul Brian Western Review

The newest addition to the Eleanor Pickup Arts Centre was unveiled to a packed audience on Dec. 14 after months of work (see below). The stage is the first of many renovations being made to the theatre as part of Phase One of renovations. Work is expected to continue on the washrooms and foyer into 2014.

Patience is needed for road crews as snow keeps falling

It would be hard to deny that the weather we've been experiencing so far this winter has been trying. The amount of snow, coupled with the fact that each snowfall seems to come right on the heels of the one before it, has area snowbanks already reaching snowing heights.

The result of what we've been seeing inevitably brings with it snow-covered roads and challenging driving conditions. It also means long hours on the roads for the work crews and municipal contractors as they try to clear them.

As last meeting in December Drayton Valley town council was informed by public works that crews had already cleared town streets as many times this season as they had all of last year. For those who had any doubts, that's an indication of just how much winter precipitation municipalities need to worry about clearing, and in the case of the town, removing and storing.

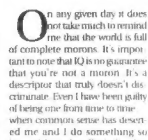

It can be easy for drivers to get frustrated as they try and navigate roads covered in heavy snow perfect for getting vehicles stuck, or narrowed by windrows, or come home to sign instructing them not to park on the street. On the other hand it is easy to speculate that public works crews and contractors have their own frustrations with impatient drivers, vehicles blocking their clearing efforts, aggravated motorists and long hours.

The majority of this year's snow has come in a constant vein, meaning before crews can even completely finish a full clear of their respective municipalities more snow is falling. Each municipality also has policies governing snow clearing, setting out priority routes. With crews scrambling to keep up there are some areas that will end up on the wrong end of the list. While that certainly causes headaches, it's important for residents to remember that there is a finite amount of equipment and resources to address the snow.

With this week's forecast not calling for much new snow crews should have a chance to get caught up. However, it's also important to note that there is still several months with the possibility of more snow. That means that residents, drivers and snow maintenance crews are going to be sharing the streets for awhile yet. It's prudent to remind all involved to have a little extra patience so we can all get through the rest of the winter together.

What's your emergency?

There and Back
Courtney Whalen

On any given day it does not take much to remind us that the world is full of complete emergencies. It's important to note that it's not guarantees that you're not a mummy. It's a descriptor that truly doesn't discriminate. Even I have been guilty of being one from time to time when common sense has deserted me and I do something so beyond the realm of logic and understanding that even I am amazed.

Having said that, I can say with complete confidence that when it comes to traveling, many of us are late for an important meeting is not an avoidable reason.

The purpose of 9-1-1 seems pretty easy to understand to me. If something is burning, if someone is having a medical emergency, if someone is breaking into your house, if someone has been in a collision — these are all legitimate reasons to phone 9-1-1.

There and Back
Courtney Whalen

People may have different ideas about what constitutes an emergency, but there are some that should be fairly obvious. Calling 9-1-1 to ask if it's OK to drive in the carpool lane because traffic is backed up and you are late for an important meeting is not an avoidable reason.

Using up the emergency line because your child won't give you the remote, or because you want the police to come to your house and yell your children in to bed is not an emergency.

Some of the other highlights on the list include calling to try and get a smoke up call, calling to look for the operator's number (possibly the only number easier to call than 9-1-1) and my personal favourite — calling 9-1-1 looking for contact details for a person they were meeting for a date or a confirmation plan.

It seems farcical, but I've heard stories about people asking the emergency services for advice on cooking a birthday turkey. While that may be a last-ditch emergency, with a household hungry relatives expecting a delicious bird, it's hardly someone's emergency dispatchers should be dealing with. Personally, I'd prefer these professionals were spending their time co-ordinating an emergency response for people who are threatening or dangerous situations.

I've had to call 9-1-1 once or twice for a family medical emergency. It was a long time ago, but I still remember it. It was scary as hell, glad there was someone who would be on the phone who would make sense out of what I was saying and get help on the way. The same panic I was at that moment might be delayed in getting the help they need because of the proliferation of calls in our society makes me pretty angry.

Try and bring a little sunshine to your day

Mental Health matters

Winter Solstice was December 21. This day is the shortest of the year when we get a meager 7.5 hours of daylight. On this day sunrise was 8:48 am and sunset is 4:16 pm.

I am like many people. I arrive to work in the dark and I return home in the dark. This is magnified by occupying an office with no windows, followed by coaching figure skating in an arena with no windows. In the past few years I have noticed that I have responded to the lack of daylight in one or all of three ways. I get lethargic, I am tired and I gain weight.

Oh okay, that last one is due to all of the cookies and baking that I have been eating. But you can't blame a girl for trying.

While on the subject of daylight hours I thought I might do some calculating. I want to know how many daylight hours am I actually missing out on? Ticker, ticker... computing

"What?" I am flabbergasted to see that from beginning November to Mid-March when we have time change I am only seeing about an hour of sunlight per day. Monday-Friday. No wonder I can't get going — my body is still thinking that it is sleeping.

How many hours of daylight are you getting? Why is it important? It seems the light that hits our retina sends messages to the hypothalamus (the part of the brain responsible for sleep, appetite, sex drive, mood and activity).

When there is not enough light these functions tend to slow down and/or gradually stop. Melatonin levels are also affected by natural light and affect our urge to sleep.

These changes in the brain can result in symptoms that include tiredness, lethargy, intense carbohydrate craving, social withdrawal and depressed mood. In extreme cases individuals can suffer from Seasonal Affective Disorder during this time of year. Seasonal Affective Disorder is a seasonal depression where people with normal mental health throughout the year experience depressive symptoms in the winter of summer months.

I understand that prolonged darkness is part in parcel to being a Canuck but come on, Monday's are already bad enough. Am I right?

Perhaps the schools have had it right all along. Maybe we should be scheduling break time that is broken in to two parts indoor snack time and outdoor fun time. I am trying to make some lifestyle changes that encourage me to be outside in the daylight for longer periods of time, like taking a periodic walk around the school and embracing outdoor winter activities.

My brother-in-law has turned to technology to help cope with his lethargy. He is using a sunrise alarm clock sort of thing.

This clock is a special light that slowly brightens in the morning, thereby waking you up like a sunrise. Another thing I have read about is phototherapy or light therapy. This is where an individual sits in front of a specialized light for a period of time. Whatever your choice it is important to note that Old Man Winter lock you inside and make efforts to get outside and soak up the sun.

Around the water cooler...

Not much more this week, so let's get down to it.

As Mother Nature continues to have a good old joke on all of us as we need to try and have some patience. While roads may not be as easily navigated as we would like, it's important to remember it. It was scary as hell, glad there was someone who would be on the phone who would make sense out of what I was saying and get help on the way. The same panic I was at that moment might be delayed in getting the help they need because of the proliferation of calls in our society makes me pretty angry.

To take a deep breath and let's say a quick thanks to the public works crews who are spending long hours on the roads.

One positive thing about this weather is that there will be no shortage of snow for the Eagle Point Loppet scheduled for Jan. 11 at the Pemina Nordic Ski Trails. You have a few days left to register (until Jan. 9) or, if you're not sure it's for you feel free to head out to the trails on Saturday to cheer on skiers of all ages and skill level. Find more on that on pg. 19.

We'd also like to say welcome to all the teams who will be coming into town for this weekend's Olmen's Donipet. The four-day 'spiel always seems to be a good time — they even get some cutting done we're told.

With the children back in school this week things will start to get back to the regular routine. Enjoy the first few weeks of January.

That's it for this week. Have a sensationally snowy week.

LIN BERRY DICK
This is the 1st Berry Buck club repaters Kate and Sage. In November we had our first meeting and the theme was "Mistral". We had weigh in and the heaviest call there was Jenna Berger's at 850 pounds! The lightest was 300 pounds! Then after we had another meeting and ate a great meal! We had interclub swimming at the Drayton pool. The last few meetings we have been talking about some pretty cool trips! The

Two Rivers club has invited us to go on a ski trip with them! So lots of exciting things this year! We had our Christmas party at Jenna and Chelsea Berger's house and we would also like to thank them and their parents for lending their garage and ice rink. We had a get together at the Robbs' house, we practiced impromptu speeches and then had a (sort of) healthy snack. On Jan. 4 the club took a trip to see an Oil Kings game. Happy New Year everyone

25 years of 'I do'

Colleen Sekura has been marrying area couples since 1988

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

She's been to backyards and gardens, community halls, theme locations and her own living room. She's married young couples, old couples, friends, family and strangers. Although the words may have been similar, each ceremony has been as unique as the couple getting married. But in 25 years there's one thing more than 950 ceremonies have had in common: the love that brings the couples in front of marriage commissioner Colleen Sekura.

"You're always meeting people on the best day of their life," said Sekura last week.

Last month she marked her 25th anniversary as a marriage commissioner for the Province of Alberta, and has been supporting for another five years.

It was at the wedding of a family friend that she was being officiated by a marriage commissioner when Sekura first thought it might be something she'd be interested in taking on. When she found out the commissioner of the time had plans to retire, she decided to give it a try. Last week she said it was another six months before the position became available and months after that before she learned she had been appointed. Initially after applying she didn't hold out much hope since she had been told that as the mother of a young family she didn't quite fit the bill. However, she eventually got the call that she was the area's new marriage commissioner and informed that her first wedding was in just a few days. With the former commissioner already retired, it was a real life.

"I didn't have any mentor. They gave me a book and said this is what you have to do to make it legal," she remembers.

She made it through that first ceremony, which a couple was holding for family and friends after previously having been legally married, and soon found her rhythm.

At a ceremony last Saturday Sekura spoke of the partnership that local woman Annahild Paulson and now-husband Luis Hernandez are embarking on and the love that brought them together.

While there are certain aspects of every ceremony that are the same, the civil ceremonies she performs have a lot of flexibility, noted Sekura, and can be tailored to whatever the couple wants to include.

"It's very rewarding," she said of the work. "They're happy to see you."

The position has given her the opportunity to meet many different people, but also to take on a special role in the marriages of those she is closest to.

She has married friends, children of friends and family members and this summer she will personally close to her heart — that of her son Cody.

Over 25 years and with more than 950 ceremonies and vow renewals, which she also performs, Sekura has learned a few things about wedding.

"You can expect that everyone will be late," she said.

With a schedule that sometimes has her performing as many as five or six weddings a day in the summer, that has led to some tight timelines over the years.

She's also found that while the general understanding is that a wedding is the bride's big day, it's often the groom who gets choked up.

"Many, many men are so emotional that they have trouble with the work," she said.

With the variety of venues she's performed her ceremonies at she also has a piece of advice for those planning their wedding.

"Realize what's going on around you," she said, noting that includes taking into consideration things like potential dust sources, noise, nearby animals, shade and other possible distractions that could take away from the ceremony itself.

To mark the milestone Sekura is entering the names of couples who book ceremonies before the end of January in a draw to win their wedding for free.

Wild Rose chair, trustee expenses show busy year

Public can access trustee expenses on school division website

Paul Brian
Western Review

Wild Rose School Division (WRSD) had a busy end of 2012 and 2013.

That's what the division's trustee and chair expense forms indicate. In any case, with significant travel and work expenses noted down during what was a year crisscrossed full of union negotiations, board meetings, professional improvement and considerable involvement in the community, particularly for WRSD board chair Nancy McClure.

"Certainly I think we benefited from having a board chair that engaged and tried to get out and be present in all parts of the community."

— Brian Celli, WRSD Superintendent

Each meeting members of the board have the chance to review each other's expense reports and bring up any concerns or questions regarding them. "I don't think people were as aware of their school trustees prior to the 2010/2013 term," McClure said. "We've been much more present and I'm saying that collectively. We consider one of our great community engagement opportunities to be our school councils so with very little exception we always attend them."

Travel is billed for both mileage and travel time as labour at 23.78 per hour, as per the policy of WRSD's Trustee Remuneration and Benefits policy, something Celli roundly defended. "Mileage is the movement in the car, and the per diem part is the hours that the person is in," he said. "Somebody who's a wage labourer, they're driving either during their regular work day, or if they're driving outside of work hours they're charging the hourlytrustee they're speaking on behalf of the board and we have to say yes, we should be engaged in this conversation. There's a degree to which we're being penny wise and pound foolish, so you have to leave some of it up to discretion. There are a couple of things that have been challenged over the four years I've been here and people say 'you know, I don't know if that was actually appropriate' and a couple of things were removed, but it happens very seldom."

rate plus overtime." As Chair McClure accrued $36,038.35 in expenses between Oct. 2012 and Oct. 2013 plus her honorarium as chair of WRSD of $9,532. She had, for example, $5,968.87 in expenses in November, 2012 and $5,832.53 in August, 2013, examples of two relatively high claims. In September, 2013, McClure charged only $135 in expenses. In the busy lead-up to the municipal election and with fewer school-related events to attend.

"Most of it [travel and labour] surrounded the collective bargaining piece. I was the chair of the negotiating committee, so I would have had a lot of extra things I had to go to, both in Rocky Mountain House, Edmonton and Calgary, that all surrounded my role as chair of the negotiating committee," McClure said. "Our school division worked without what's called a registered bargaining agent so we saved money on a very expensive professional and did it all through myself, Dixie [McLeod] and our secretary-treasurer Gord Majeran."

McClure recalled November, 2013 as a particularly busy month. "All hell broke loose at the provincial government when they found out all that information about the bitumen issue and then West, Texas, so we were called to a number of conferences," she said. "It's usually me who attends, because that's my role."

An example of a few of the events McClure attended outside negotiations, school functions and regular business included a Family Wellness Founders meet charged at two hours labour as well as One Smart World workshop with Jim Gibbons in Rocky Mountain House where participants learned what colour type they were in terms of their professional relationships, among other exercises. The colour workshop was charged at 110 kilometres travel and 10 hours of labour. Trustee Lynn Oberle charged 8.5 hours labour for attending the same Jim Gibbons workshop and 240 kilometres travel.

Board makes decision to publish its expenses online

Celli stood behind McClure's expenses, stating the big benefit she has been to the division and community with her involvement. "I've seen people take advantage of the expenses and it would be much better if it was more controlled that way, because the McClure gets very good value for every dollar she charges," Celli said.

McClure also pointed out that WRSD's honorariums are relatively low. "The basic honorarium is much less than most," she said. "So the amount of hours ends up that there are more things that would end up outside of that, potentially."

WRSD trustee expenses for the same period for Drayton Valley and Brazeau County trustees were $18,306.42 for Scott Warren and $17,737.46 for Lynn Oberle. Both were also paid the WRSD trustee honorarium of $8,140.

Among various standard expenses trustees also charged hours and mileage for attending schools' Christmas events and for attending Remembrance Day ceremonies. Trustee Bonnie Miller charged for attending three Christmas events in January, 2013 but did not charge for attending Literacy Day at Leduc's school in the same month. Trustee Gary Thompson charged 73 kilometers travel and four hours labour for being a courier. Has Talent judge in May, 2013 and seven kilometers travel as well as three hours labour for attending a "Condo Grade 6-8" class presentation in the same month, while trustee Dixie McLeod charged three hours labour for "Smash Cards" to WCLIS, PD, RCS and WVC, also EHE Xmas concert in January, 2013 and two hours labour for "Jazz concert" in June, 2013. Trustee Keith Warren, as well as McClure charged four hours labour for attending a retirement dinner in June, 2013.

The WRSD trustee

Remuneration and Benefits policy states that no honorarium will be paid, except as authorized by the board, for attendance at social functions of the staff.

"I don't just desire to go then you don't expense, but if you are requested to attend then you do expense. I think that's the way it went but I'd have to check that," Celli said.

These and other monthly expenses were signed off on and authorized by WRSD Assistant Superintendent Gordon Majumdar.

Celli stated that WRSD has just recently established the terms of reference for a finance and audit committee that will be part of trustee oversight over each other's expenses. It should be operational by January, 2014 according to Celli. He emphasized that it has nothing to do with any concerns over trustee expenses.

"We were going to have to do it anyway with the Education Act that's coming," he explained. "We were actually ahead of the game, we were one of the first if not the first board to be putting its expenses up."

McClure welcomed any questions or discussion on her expenses.

"I feel quite comfortable that my expense claims are reflective of the work that I do. In fact I do a lot that I don't expense for. My visibility in the community is significant, and I believe that helps my role and I absolutely do not charge for any of those things," McClure said, noting her involvement with the Boys and Girls Club as an example for which she only charged for air attending and travel for fire.

"I advocated strongly for their [expense forms] to be public domain information and I'm quite proud of the fact that we were the first division in the province to do that."

Now that she's also a town councillor in Drayton Valley and WRSD has ratified its agreement with

I feel quite comfortable that my expense claims are reflective of the work that I do.

Nancy McClure, WRSD Chair

Timberline Local, McClure expects things to be a bit less busy in the next few months.

"A lot of things I was travelling to that other board members were not travelling to related to the collective bargaining process."

Looking at the other school board that serves the area, St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic Schools (STAR) paid trustee Susan Kathol a $17,470 honorarium and personal expenses in the amount of $7,313 while STAR chair Sandra Bannard was paid an honorarium of $18,143 and personal expenses of $12,118. All these STAR expenses are for the period from Sept. 2012 to Aug. 31, 2013.

However, McClure noted that STAR and WRSD are very different in nature and size to a straight comparison would not be an accurate reflection. STAR has 10 schools, 350 staff including support staff and as of its most recent 2013 numbers had 3,364 students enrolled across its school division. WRSD has 18 schools in its division, and approximately 285 full-time teachers. Based on its numbers STAR appears to pay a higher honorarium but less for personal expenses because more events are required attendance without paying personal expenses as part of the chair position, according to STAR treasurer Jennie Fontaine.

"Maybe we need to look at that going forward as well," Celli said of STAR's higher honorarium, less personal expenses system.

McClure also stated that it may be an idea going ahead to increase the honorarium while looking at decreasing expenses or bringing more of them under the job description along with the higher base honorarium. But many differences with STAR make a comparison unhelpful.

"We actually wouldn't compare to STAR Catholic just because there is a little bit different," McClure said, noting that central Alberta divisions like Wolf Creek are most similar to WRSD.

McClure also said the religious affiliation of STAR changes the roles of its trustees and chair.

"Their church is very much a focus of all their engagement and it's not something that we [WRSD] have," McClure said.

Although WRSD has had cut a number of staff recently, Celli said that was something the division knew was coming. "I don't know the exact number because we will have to replace some things [positions], but at the end of last year we were looking at eliminating about 22, 23 positions," he said. "What you need to understand is that we artificially maintained class positions and support positions in different positions for a number of years utilizing reserves and avoid layoffs. We knew we were going to have to reduce eventually. It looks really bad, and it was bad, but it's not quite the way people would play it out."

He acknowledged that if trustee expenses could be reduced by $12,000 each it could potentially have saved one full-time teaching position, but remarked that was not a feasible option. "When we do cut expenses we basically have a pool of money that trustees draw from," he explained.

"If anything, Celli stressed that even more work is being done than is shown on the expense forms, something he may like to see change."

"There's actually a lot of work that people [trustees and chair] do that don't get charged. It's unfortunate. I almost think that we should go to having everything that you do do and if you don't charge for it just putting a zero in the rest of the story," Celli said.

Copies of WRSD chair and trustee individual expense forms are available online at www.wrds.ca/boardmeetings-highlights under "Board Member and Superintendent Expenses."

"I never thought this would have happened, it was all just an index," she said.

"It was crazy and to think that all these important adults were taking seriously a 13-year-old at the time, it's just crazy to think how much has happened and how far I've personally and mentally come," she said.

But what has had the most impact in all of this is that Murphy is still here in his role.

In 2012, Murphy contacted Mayor Peter Brown in hopes of discussing her concerns about bullying, of which she says she has been a victim.

"But before that meeting, her emotional state became so fragile due to the constant bullying that she tried to take her own life and was hospitalized until early 2013."

When she came home, she was determined to change things and to speak up for those who couldn't, or wouldn't, do so.

She and her mother, Tara, pushed for a bylaw in Alderlie that would not only penalize bullies of all ages, but emphasize education and rehabilitation to end the vicious cycle.

They were successful and in September, Alderlie amended its Public Behaviour Bylaw to include the bullying provisions, joining a small number of other cities with such provisions.

Murphy said during the time the bylaw was under debate, she was bullied for trying to bring it into effect and thought about giving up.

She persevered, and looking back might be worth it now.

"I'm not a hero — I'm just someone who didn't like the way things were going so I changed it," she said.

Despite all that she has accom-

Nickelodeon Murphy, 11, just wanted to talk to her mayor about the problem of bullying.

She had to listen how big that single act would become.

Since December 2012, Murphy has become one of the most recognized faces in the fight against bullying. She was the catalyst behind Alderlie's anti-bullying bylaw, has met with multiple mayors and provincial leaders and her story is known in the House of Commons in Ottawa.

Currently she's working as an ambassador with the Amanda Todd Legacy and has been asked to attend several motivational rallies and public speaking events, plan mental health campaigns and provide input on legislation being drafted to put an end to the bullying epidemic.

In 2012, Murphy contacted Mayor Peter Brown in hopes of discussing her concerns about bullying, of which she says she has been a victim.

"But before that meeting, her emotional state became so fragile due to the constant bullying that she tried to take her own life and was hospitalized until early 2013."

When she came home, she was determined to change things and to speak up for those who couldn't, or wouldn't, do so.

She and her mother, Tara, pushed for a bylaw in Alderlie that would not only penalize bullies of all ages, but emphasize education and rehabilitation to end the vicious cycle.

They were successful and in September, Alderlie amended its Public Behaviour Bylaw to include the bullying provisions, joining a small number of other cities with such provisions.

Murphy said during the time the bylaw was under debate, she was bullied for trying to bring it into effect and thought about giving up.

She persevered, and looking back might be worth it now.

"I'm not a hero — I'm just someone who didn't like the way things were going so I changed it," she said.

Despite all that she has accomplished. Murphy says she isn't finished — she can't imagine her life without some form of anti-bullying advocacy.

"She wants to do more public speaking, especially in schools, bring more community awareness about how bullying is such a big problem and continue the work she's currently doing with political leaders."

This past year has seen Murphy achieve personal milestones too. She started doing things that used to make her happy, like singing, and she joined a public school again, even making the honor roll.

She admits that was daunting but that it has worked out better than she expected.

Murphy said she can see the change her work is beginning to have right in her own school.

"I think people are afraid to bully me, honestly," she said with a laugh, adding while she still sees bullying take place, more people seem to be aware of their actions.

"When I'm around people, they'll be like, 'Oh, I'm sorry, that was really rude,' because I am the 'anti-bullying girl' and yes, I'm right there but the fact that people are more aware that it's happening, it's nice to see people taking initiative and realize what they're saying," Murphy said.

Like everyone else, the teen said she still occasionally makes rude comments, but has made a conscious effort to fight back when she has a disagreement with someone instead of resorting to the easier bullying and derogatory tactics.

A lot has happened in 2013, but Murphy still has a way to go.

"I'm not sure what my success story is — bullying has long-term effects and I'm still dealing with them, trying to get a treatment plan to deal with... we do orders that I may or may not have and it may take my whole life to recover but I'm on the way there and I'm being the person I used to be but accepting who I am now," she explained.

"It's a part of me and I'm fine with that — people see me as the anti-bullying girl and that's OK but I know I'm more than that."

ENVIRONMENTAL

FOR SASKATCHEWAN REGION

Shell Scottford's push for the Quest carbon capture and storage (CCS) project has received a new boost in the form of environmental consciousness.

With critics bemoaning a number of proposed pipelines, such as the Northern Gateway line out of Broadview, safety precautions took the forefront of an environmental push.

"The permit is exactly what shows us what is on the ground, and the procedures are in place to prove to us that while constructing the pipeline the licensee is meeting the Alberta Energy Regulator's requirements," said Amanda Andriashchuk, a field inspector with AER.

The Quest CCS project will transport carbon dioxide emitted by Shell's Scotford upgrader 80 kilometers north of the facility. The carbon storage project will store CO₂ in an underground storage tank, and will be transported by pipeline.

The analysis took on a broad spectrum of the responsibilities of the AER, as well as mandated under the Responsible Energy Development Act of December 2012.

The provincial group is responsible for all projects — from application to reclamation — including the regulation of gas and coal development.

By Spring 2014, the government agency will also take on water and environmental concerns.

According to Andriashchuk, there are 400,000 kilometers of pipeline running through Alberta, which are being inspected by AER inspectors.

"We look at previous inspections completed for that operator," she said.

"We look at the environment that the pipeline is running through. The fact that we previously looked at the river crossings, road crossings, or (whether they are) crossing other pipelines, and also proximity to any of these things."

Andriashchuk explained that potential inherent risks for pipelines cover the material and specifications of the pipeline itself, as well as what product will run through the line.

Regulations surrounding a pipeline and potential environmental impacts are also taken into account.

There are cases where pipelines do cross other pipelines or run parallel to them, and that's important because there are rules that allow for a safe distance between pipelines in all cases, so that's what we're looking for," Andriashchuk noted.

Just as there needs to be sufficient depth of cover over the pipeline to keep it safe, there needs to be distance between the lines, as well."

The Quest CCS project is expected to be completed by the end of Summer 2014, and is the first project of its kind in Alberta. The CCS project will receive provincial and federal government assistance in the amount of $865 million.

CRIPA COUNTR RUNNER BEATEN IN RACE

How Valley runner Crispin...
While attempting to run a cross-country race, Crispin was beaten by a...
at Banff early New Year's Day, but is planning to carry on and complete his run in the West Coast.

Jamie McDonald, 27, had a back pack containing his belongings when he was beaten over the head as he celebrated the New Year at downtown Banff. The man then appeared to be stolen from his bag containing cash he has raised as part of his fundraising efforts on his cross-country race for the SickKids Foundation and the United Kingdom, some credit cards and film footage from his journey.

The backpack was stolen from the side of the attack. Banff RCMP Sgt Kevin Craft said he was not aware of any arrests, including an undisclosed amount of cash, missing from the bag, nor do they have any details on how it came to be back in the owner's possession.

"We are still investigating the whole incident, so we don't want to release too much detail at this time," said Cpl. Craft last week. "The main thing I can tell you is we are investigating an incident that happened with him."

McDonald wrote on his blog, "Some of you may know that I was attacked in the early hours of New Year's Day in Banff and that I left quickly after the unprovoked attack, leaving my bag. I was told it had been taken. I reported the incident to the police today, including what I remembered of the three attackers. The police have been very, very helpful and supportive. I'm physically fine and was obviously very shaken up, but the support has been incredible. Although I'd been told my bag had been taken, it appears that wherever I was, I had a change of mind, as the bag was found at near the place I left after the attack."

McDonald, who began his run last March, wears a superhero costume bearing the likeness of The Flash. He is on the last leg of his journey across Canada, with less than a 1,000 kilometres left in his nearly 8,000 km mission. Shortly after the attack, McDonald said BBC News, "I have no idea how I'm going to handle this or what I'm going to do. The bag was the most important thing of my life — it held everything of this whole adventure, all the video footage, my credit cards, everything I own."

McDonald began his fundraising efforts — which have raised more than $100,000 CAD — as a way of repaying the care he received as a child and young adult for a spinal condition called syringomyelia.

In 2012, McDonald cycled from Bangkok to his hometown of Gloucester, England, a distance of 22,500 km.

During his trip, he has been beaten at, arrested and spent some nights in rough conditions.

By contrast, his treatment in Canada has been excellent. "I would like to thank you all again, especially the people at Banff, who've shown me the most incredible hospitality," thanked McDonald. "I'd like to say that this doesn't affect my thoughts about Canada one bit. I've had the best experience here and the world-famous Canadian hospitality has been proved to be anything but a stereotype."

A portion of the proceeds he raises while in Alberta will be distributed to the Alberta Children's Hospital.

EDMONTON GROUP ADVOCATES FOR ACCESSIBILITY

Edmonton's Accessible...
The mobility challenges have a new voice in the fight for accessibility, with Mighywheelers stepping in to advocate for their right to equal accessibility and safety in Edmonton's streets and sidewalks.

"Mothers and fathers with baby strollers, the elderly with walking aids, or other people like me in wheelchairs, we all need the ramps and sidewalks to go on shape," said Timothy Maxwell, founder of Mighywheelers, an advocacy group that is looking to promote accessibility in political policy and among property owners.

Deferred maintenance has left Edmonton's infrastructure in a state of decay. But for people with mobility issues, crumbling sidewalks, chipped curbs and decaying intersection ramps can prove dangerous or simply impassable. "It's really sad," said Maxwell.

Section 38 of Alberta's built code includes requirements for allow construction to accommodate people with disabilities.

But often the interpretation of these parameters is flawed due to a lack of perspective from builders on the real needs of those with mobility issues.

"As a result, Maxwell says even these buildings that do have ramps are often too badly designed to be effective and safe, or often inaccessible, estimating as much as 80 per cent of the ramps in Edmonton are not properly designed or maintained.

As well, these codes do not have any requirements for maintenance, meaning there is no guarantee that once accessible buildings will remain that way. "Property owners do not care," said Maxwell, adding financial pressure often means builders and property owners often take the easiest way out when accommodating persons with disabilities.

Meanwhile snow covered sidewalks and large windrows make navigating Edmonton's sidewalks dangerous if not impossible.

For Maxwell, who relies on a wheelchair to get around, accessibility means more than just ramps, automatic doors, handicapped parking spaces and elevators, it means safety and independence for his "so-called comrades."

"There's no one to stand up for the handicapped folk," said Maxwell. "That's why Mighywheelers seem to stand up."

Maxwell understands that progress can be slow, but says the first step is understanding that improved accessibility benefits everyone, and the average person needs to be aware of the dangers and frustration people with reduced mobility face every day.

TEEN FOOTBALLERS DON HIGH HEELS

Carleton Place...
About a dozen Carleton Place football players, decked out in pads, pants and jerseys, joined the danger of men stepping out in high heels to support the Carleton Place Women's Shelter during the Koolhaug game on Jan. 4.

The event is in its third year, but this is the first time the Buffaloes have taken part. Daryl Kiefer, who took over the role of president of the Buffaloes organization at the end of November, was eager to get the players involved in this particular fundraiser.

"It's a good opportunity for our organization to give back to the community and to help them raise awareness," he said. "It'll be a win-win situation for everybody."

"This society, there shouldn't even be a need for shelters, but there is. So we need to change attitudes about that, and it's easier to change and to teach a kid properly when they're young, so they get older it's a lot harder," continued Kiefer. "I hope that carries on from generation to generation and a person can change the attitudes that way by teaching them properly to begin with."

Kiefer was at the event last year and thought to himself that the juxtaposition between the feminine footwear and sports gear might help draw attention to the cause.

"What would be better than having a bunch of football players walking around in high-heeled shoes?" he said. "It's mostly humans, just because of the age and the foot size. Size eight is the smallest they go with shoes, so that cuts out some of the persons, but it's not a problem for the humans. We've got bumsteaks that have size 13 and 14 feet." Kiefer said the club plans to make the walk an annual event, creating competition and rewarding the team that raises the most pledges with the pleasure of seeing the coach take part.

Thunder start New Year with mixed results

Thunder fight for last playoff spot with start of New Year

Western Review Staff

With the New Year upon us the Drayton Valley Thunder have big goals in their future as they fight to move up into playoff position in the North Division.

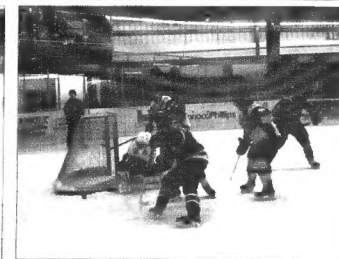

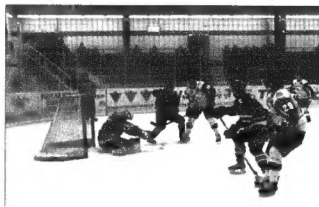

The boys' first game of the year kicked off in Bonnyville on Jan. 3, as they went up against the Pontiacs and didn't see the results they were hoping for.

Always a fast-paced battle when meeting up with the Pontiacs, the Thunder were able to keep things close through most of the game but the third period proved to be a little too much as the Pontiacs scored four goals and finished off the game with a 6-2 victory.

Taking a lesson from the victory, the Thunder returned to their home rink at the Draytonplex where they went toe to toe against the Calgary Mustangs on Jan. 5.

The first goal of the game went to the visiting Mustangs and the competition held the lead through two periods of play. Much like Friday's game the third period would see four goals hit the net, but this time it was in the Thunder's favour, finishing up the game with a 4-1 victory for the home team.

The Thunder hit the ice next on Jan. 7 as they go up against the Lloydminster Bobcats and then they hit the road for their next two games when they visit the Camrose Eagles on Jan. 10 and the Okotoks Oilers on Jan. 11.

The Drayton Valley Thunder started off 2014 with mixed results as they lost against the Bonnyville Pontiacs on Jan. 3, but were able to find the win on Jan. 5 as they went up against the Calgary Mustangs.

Disappointing weekend for Wildcats

Lesley Allan Western Review

The start to 2014 wasn't quite what the Drayton Valley Wildcats had hoped for as they faced off against two teams last weekend. Things kicked off on Jan. 3 when the Wildcats played to a home crowd as the Edison Ice came for a visit and took a 5-3 victory. The Wildcats second loss on the weekend came Jan. 5 when they travelled to Slave Lake, where the Winterhawks outshot them and took the win with a score of 5-3.

Local club to welcome skiers for loppet event

Skiers of all skill level welcome to take part

Courtney Whalen
Western Review

This weekend put down the snow shovel and change your perspective on winter by picking up some skis and heading out to the Pembina Nordic Ski Club trails.

The club will be welcoming skiers of all ages eager to enjoy the local trails and take part in the Eagle Point Loppet on Jan. 11. Although more formal than a leisurely ski around the trails, a loppet is still a fun, family-friendly way to spend the day, check out the trails and meet other skiers.

Thanks to Mother Nature's contribution of snow and the hard work of volunteer groomers the trails are ready for use.

"They're fantastic," said PNSC executive member Jeanette Radchenko last week.

This weekend they'll be getting lots of use as registrations for the loppet have already started to come in, both from local participants and from surrounding communities. The day's event includes a distance for every ability and age with courses set out for 1 km, 5 km, 11 km, 22 km and 33 km. Skiers can choose whatever technique is most comfortable for them, either skate ski or classic.

Although set up like a race, loppets offer a friendly atmosphere that is good for families and those new to the trails, said Radchenko.

"A loppet is sort of competitive for yourself," she continued, saying it gives skiers a chance to challenge themselves to longer distances or opt for a shorter distance with the added benefit of having other skiers on the trails to encourage and push them.

"It's very friendly in that way."

Members of the local ski club often travel to loppets in other communities during the winter. This is the first one that's been held locally in more than 15 years.

As well as a chance for local skiers to come out and give it a try the event will give out of town skiers a chance to try out the trails. Many people have become familiar with the Pembina Nordic Ski Trails due to them hosting the Alberta Cup the past two years, but maybe haven't had a chance to try them out for themselves.

The cost for the event is $10 for participants under 16 and $16 for all other ages. The registration deadline for the Eagle Point Loppet is Jan. 9 and skiers can register online at www.zone4.ca.

For those unsure about the loppet Radchenko said spectators are welcome to come out on Jan. 11 to cheer on skiers and see what the loppet and the trails are all about.

Although the Alberta Cup won't be hosted at the Pembina Nordic Ski Trails this year, the club that maintains them still has a busy winter season ahead.

Once again this year the Jackrabbit program will be teaching the next generation of skiers the basics of the sport. The ever-popular program is already full for this season and will get started mid-January. The PNSC is also planning to hold some adult ski lessons for those interested in taking up the sport.

Radchenko said skiers don't have to be a member of the local club to come out and enjoy the trails. Each weekend the gate to the trails along Range Road 494 is thrown open and a member of the ski club hosts by making sure the fire is lit outside the chalet to welcome visitors. Anyone is able to come and ski the groomed trails free of charge on weekends throughout the winter.

The club also hosts moonlight skis during the winter that are open to the public.

For more information on the ski club, directions to the trails, a map of the trail system and to stay up to date on upcoming events go online to www.pembina-nordic.org or www.ehpnascouncil.org.

See if a positive attitude makes a difference

Dear Working Wise:
My supervisor is always on my case about everything, he never has anything good to say, he's always complaining, is he allowed to do that? It almost seems like harassment. What can I do? Signed, Worn out worker

Dear Worn out:
It is hard to tell from your letter if your supervisor is like this with everyone or just you.

If he is like this with everyone you might want to talk to your co-workers together to discuss his management and communication styles with him. If it seems like he is only picking on you, you might want to meet with him to discuss your performance and how he communicates with you. Try asking him to narrow down his top three concerns and then agree to work on them and meet soon to discuss the progress that both of you have made.

Getting specific and meeting frequently will allow both of you to see that you are both committed to improving your working relationship.

You might also want to give some thought to your attitude at work. A positive attitude is one of the most important things you can bring to work with you every day. Would your supervisor and co-workers say that you:

- Are dependable, responsible, punctual,
- Are honest and keep your promises,
- Organize your work and keep up with it,
- Follow directions and ask questions when necessary,
- Take responsibility for your mistakes,
- Can accept criticism without resenting it,
- Recognize your weaknesses and try to correct them,
- Are enthusiastic about what you do,
- Are courteous and polite, even when you are unhappy.

- Dress appropriately for your workplace,
- Can handle mild teasing and control your temper,
- Respect other people's opinions/beliefs,
- Are optimistic even when others are not,
- Easily adapt to new/unexpected situations,
- Do not become negative when things don't go your way,
- Can disagree without being disagreeable,
- Are a courteous driver,
- Usually speak positively about others,
- Find it easy to like most people,
- Avoid feeling sorry for yourself,

• Take an interest in others
Try asking your supervisor what pressures he or she is under? Knowing where your supervisor is coming from and what his/her priorities are will help you better understand their demands and how you can help.

— Do you have a work-related question? Send your questions to Working Wise, at charles.strachey@gov.ab.ca. Charles Strachey is a manager with Alberta Human Services. This column is provided for general information.

If you are having difficulty with a supervisor at work it may be time to set up a meeting to discuss expectations and determine how to build a better working relationship.

Find your fitness fit for 2014

Hot new ways to work up a sweat for an even better you

Joanne Richard
Special to OMI Agency

Will twerking become the hottest fitness trend? You can't deny it burns calories, gets your heart rate up and would definitely add fun to fitness. Well, the butt-jiggling frenzy might not be in the fitness forecast for 2014 just yet, but you can bet these trends will get hearts racing in the new year. Let's get physical!

Fitness fusion will be hot. Think spinga, boxilates, spinbarre and yogalates! What? Fuse spinning and yoga for spinga. Boxing and pilates equals boxilates. Spinning and barre training gives you spinbarre. And combine yoga and pilates together for yogalates.

"Head to toe fitness is hot," says Dr. Stacy Irvine, of Totum.ca. "Everyone is time crunched so fusing fundamentals from multiple exercise genres is ideal."

Workout while you work. Getting out of that chair is paramount to wellness in the workplace. Expect to see more treadmill desks, exercise stability balls used as chairs, and active meetings. Think standing meetings and walking meetings. Being active increases productivity, says Irvine, chiropractor and exercise specialist at Totum Life Science in Toronto. So schedule a mini boardroom workout during the meeting to get blood circulating and boost brain power and decision-making skills.

High intensity workouts: They'll continue to be all the rage, experts say. "High level interval training is 2014's new catch phrase for bootcamp," says Jessica Zapata, of InfiniteFit.ca. "Workouts can be done solo, small group or even a large group. Participants will complete exercises, for either time or repetitions. The goal is to move as much as possible, with little recovery, therefore maximizing calorie burn. Workouts typically last anywhere from 15 to 45 minutes."

This is not for beginners, nor should it be done daily.

Working out in nature not only optimizes your workout but it offers an array of health benefits, including lowering stress levels and boosting moods

Get spinny. Thanks to new studios such as Soul Cycle in L.A. and, says Zapata, and the best part is that by keeping fitness simple and doable, you'll be consistent and get results. "Although taxing the muscles is important and a key concept in resistance training, this doesn't always mean lifting heavy weights," adds Zapata. "Using your own body weight or devices such as the TRX (suspension training) or even a friend or family member, exercises can be made challenging enough to see really great results."

One-on-one fun: Certified personal trainers will continue to motivate clients and keep them injury free. "There's a reason fitness professionals have been on the ACSM (American College of Sports Medicine) top fitness trends list for the past eight years," says Zapata. Educated personal trainers help guide participants with proper programming. Be sure to look for trainers who hold certifications such as CSER, canfitpro, NSCA and ACSM to ensure credibility.

Get down and give me 10: Body weight exercises are making a comeback. Think pushups, pull-ups, squats, lunges, jumping jacks homes Set up a home office

News Canada

Many workplaces are opting out of the traditional space in lieu of remote, home-based offices. There are many reasons for this, but some employers look at it as a tremendous cost saving that also results in a happy and productive workforce. Whether you are one of those lucky work-from-home folks or if you run your own business, here are a few little quick tips to make sure your work space leads you to success.

The comfort of your own home can lend a more casual environment, but it's imperative to hold up a professional appearance when working from home. Background noise when on a conference call or virtual meeting is not acceptable. Having a designated work space that is separate from your home space will help to balance work and your personal life. Soundproofing, as well as an excellent solution, especially if you need to tune out a barking dog or squealing children.

Sound dampening is becoming a requirement for modern families, so if you have the opportunity to re-insulate your home or office space, sound proofing insulation is an excellent choice.

Stone wool insulation, for example, is a top choice for professional recording studios. This material is an excellent acoustic barrier that actually absorbs the sound. For homeowners, retailers point to a performance tested product called Rousal Safe 'n' Sound mineral wool insulation. It provides higher sound absorption against low frequency (bass) ranges that frequency of block.

Investing in the right home office equipment is another key to success. Consider your office needs when purchasing equipment. Don't get caught up in the latest, but focus on the functionality. A good desk with adequate storage is necessary, as well as a separate phone system (from your home) and updated computer equipment and software.

Ensure you have everything you would have in a business office.

Establishing office hours will help to keep you on track. Setting boundaries so family and friends don't interrupt you will keep you on point and productive. Working from home can be isolating, so make sure you make time to meet face-to-face with colleagues or clients. This balance will make the whole "working from home" a rewarding experience.
